"Dunn Diggers" - Vol 1, Issue 7 (21 Oct 2002)

Genealogy Virus? In a recent Rootsweb newsletter, Dayna McMullen, shares my own concern about the accuracy of family lines posted to some websites:

Dayna says: "After getting back into genealogy after a five-year break, there is one thing I have observed over and over again while viewing the "Trees" at some websites. Errors. Cousin Sue finds Cousin John and he sends his GEDCOM file to Sue. Without even considering there could be typos, wrong relationships, wrong dates and locations, etc. Sue incorporates John's GEDCOM into hers. Now she posts her file in the "World Tree," warts and all. She has not checked sources (if there were any included in his file to begin with). She simply adds all of his stuff to hers.

Next Cousin Ann finds John and Sue and they share their files. Again, the data is passed around like a plate at the dinner table -- errors and all. You can look at the data online in these "World Trees" and see who copied whose work without a second thought of what that data could do to discredit their own work.

Do you think this could be addressed in the RootsWeb Review and point out to people just how damaging it can be to blindly copy other people's work without verifying the sources. By passing inaccurate data around the world, it perpetuates even more errors. It's the genealogy equivalent of a virus that spreads and grows." -- Dayna McMullen

NOTE from your editor: Because of text constraints publishing an e-mail newsletter, generally, I do not cite sources for the data contained in the newsletter. However, I DO have a source list in my own files and should anyone wonder where a particular entry originated, please contact me.

7. Carroll Co., TN Query - Charlene (Dunn) Morris

Charlene is trying to identify the John Dunn that was in Carroll Co, TN 1840 Census - "I went to the LDS Library in Salt Lake City, in July, and the helpers at the Library, thought this might be a father to my William H. Dunn, as he was married in Carroll Co., TN 1846, and there was two children the right age for he and his brother, I would like to know if there is any one doing this line."

Thanks, Charlene Dunn Morris ( Mc1@centurytel.net)

11. Confederates in Brazil (Rev. Ballard Smith Dunn)

In a recent issue of "History Magazine," Oct/Nov 2002, pages 30-32; author H. D. Miller reports on Confederate colonies under the Southern Cross. "Every year on Jul 4th, a group of Brazilians gather in a city located some 90 miles northwest of Sao Paulo to celebrate their common ancestry. They are known as 'os confederados,' or the Confederates and are descendants of Southerners who chose to flee the country at the end of the Civil War.

The Brazilian emperor Dom Pedro II, who'd supported the Confederate cause during the war encouraged southern immigration. Dom Pedro offered land at 2-1/2 cents per acre with three years to pay; subsidized passage and guarantee of religious tolerance, an important consideration in an overwhelmingly Catholic country.

Only days after the fall of the Confederacy, the first Southern immigrants left the US. Among the early arrivals in Brazil was Rev. Ballard Smith Dunn, an Episcopalian minister who'd been a chaplain and ordnance officer for the Confederacy and rector of St. Phillip's Church in New Orleans.

Rev. Dunn managed to acquire 614,000 acres on the Juquia River, in the Riveria de Iguape basin, a coastal region southeast of Sao Paulo. Dunn named it 'Lizzieland' after his wife Elizabeth. Later, Dunn returned to Louisiana to recruit settlers, returning in May 1865 with 260 persons.

Nearly all the American colonies ran into trouble in the early years of establishment. When 'Lizzieland' was flooded by torrential winter rains, the Rev. Dunn, left his adopted home and returned to US, never to see Brazil again."
